CENTENNIAL INITIATIVE

Site: GOIS

Year: 2007

Vision Statement

The Centennial vision for the Governors Island National Monument is to preserve the National Monument's primary historic resources - Castle Williams and Fort Jay - two 1812-era fortifications, built as part of our nation's early coastal defense system. The forts would become a Harbor Center, a hub of activities for visitors exploring Governors Island as part of a larger New York Harbor tour and experience. The Governors Island National Monument would become an attraction for the 8-million local residents of New York City, with compelling, educational and fun activities that will bring people back again and again, and serve as a must-see harbor attraction by out-of-town visitors.

Working with other national parks in the New York/New Jersey area, NY state and city agencies, private partners and organizations throughout New York City, NPS would develop creative and changing exhibitions, public programs and special events within the rehabilitated forts and surrounding parade grounds. Programs, activities and research would spring from and focus on the history, development and ecology of the harbor over time, the significance and historical military role of Governors Island, and the people of Governors Island who shaped national and world events. Castle Williams would become the island's main exhibition and public activity center, with Fort Jay becoming a temporary live-work compound for visiting researchers, historians, scientists, and artists -- whose work and own programs complement and add to the array of public programs offered by NPS. Given our "heart of the harbor" location and proximity to the largest city in the U.S., our vision includes offering visitors a variety of ways to experience and learn about Governors Island, and applying new technologies to reach and serve audiences of different ages, countries and backgrounds.

Rehabilitate Fort Jay and Castle Williams to remove existing hazardous materials and install safety features to enable safe and healthy public access and use of these primary park resources. Likewise, rehabilitate the Fort Jay Parade Ground by removing non-essential structures and re-landscaping to re-connect the historical and visual connections between the 2 forts and with the harbor and its public esplanade.
